HealthELearning.net - Health Professionals Given Instant Access to e-Learning for Individuals, Teams and Departments

HealthELearning.net, the health-specific e-learning portal used by over 100,000 health professionals working in 200 NHS Trusts is now e-commerce enabled. Anyone can register on the portal and get direct access to a wide variety of cost-effective e-learning courses, simply by using a debit or credit card, so learners can start new courses almost immediately.

NHS Trusts, private health care institutions and individuals signed up to HealthELearning.net can choose to buy e-learning courses for themselves or other individuals, or set up an account to purchase courses for their team or training department.

Ken Wood, the founder and director of Course-Source, which supplies the Health e-Learning Portal, says: -

“E-commerce enabling the portal brings good news to the health sector. It is now possible to purchase e-learning as a discretionary expense, instead of having to shell out considerable sums of money on licence fees. A line manager in the NHS or private healthcare organisation will no longer be forced to send a colleague on an external classroom course when they need the training urgently, but will now be able to use e-learning where appropriate for a fraction of the cost.”

As part of Course-Source's ongoing commitment to develop and expand the site, new courses have been added to the HealthELearning.net including “NHS Continuing Healthcare, Common Assessment Framework (Managers and Practitioners)”, “Mental Capacity Act 2005”, “Adult Protection, and Caring for people with Dementia”.

Also featured in the extensive catalogue are courses in Management, Communication, Interviewing Skills, Customer Service, Diversity, Finance, and IT from leading UK suppliers like Video Arts. To view the full training catalogue visit <http://www.healthlearning.net> - there is no need to register.
